Fast & Furious Presents: Hobbs & Reyes* (TBA)

In November 2019, producer Hiram Garcia confirmed that all creatives involved have intentions in developing a sequel to Hobbs & Shaw, with conversations regarding the project ongoing. By March 2020, Dwayne Johnson confirmed that a sequel was officially in development, while the creative team was not yet decided. Garcia confirmed the project was in active development a month later, citing the box office performance of Hobbs

& Shaw, and announced Chris Morgan would return to write. Johnson expressed excitement for the sequel that same month, stating that it will introduce new characters.

In November 2021, Johnson revealed that he had developed an original idea for the sequel, which he described as "the antithesis of Fast & Furious" and that he presented the concept to Universal Pictures chairwoman Donna Langley, as well as Garcia and Morgan. He elaborated the sequel would take immediate precedence over the rest of his film-slate, and further teased its development will progress after he completes the holiday- action film Red One (2023). Later that month, Garcia confirmed that work on the screenplay is ongoing, calling the film "very ambitious". In December 2022, Universal Pictures producer Kelly McCormick stated the film's production has been stalled.

In June 2023, Johnson announced plans for a direct Hobbs & Shaw sequel were postponed, and that a standalone sequel serving as a direct continuation to Fast X (2023) that would bridge into the eleventh main film was in development. The film's title, Hobbs & Reyes, was then announced, with Johnson and Jason Momoa set to star. Morgan is set to return to write the film, with Garcia, Johnson, Dany Garcia, Vin Diesel, Samantha Vincent, Jeff Kirschenbaum, and Neal H. Moritz set to produce.

Untitled Fast X sequel (2025)

In April 2023, Louis Leterrier was announced as the director of an untitled sequel to Fast X and Hobbs & Reyes, while Christina Hodson and Oren Uziel were confirmed as screenwriters five days later. Later that month at CinemaCon, Vin Diesel revealed the eleventh film will be released in 2025. The project is put on hold due to the 2023 Writers Guild of America and ongoing SAG-AFTRA strikes.

Untitled twelfth film (TBA)

In May 2023, during Fast X's premiere in Rome, Diesel claimed Universal requested the finale be extended to three parts.

Untitled female-led spin-off (TBA)

In 2015, Diesel said major spin-offs were in development. A female spin-off was confirmed in 2019 with Nicole Perlman, Lindsey Beer, and Geneva Robertson-Dworet as screenwriters.

Short films

Film	U.S. release date	Director(s)	Screenwriter(s)	Story by	Producer(s)	Running time
The Turbo Charged Prelude for 2 Fast 2 Furious	June 3, 2003	Philip G. Atwell	Keith Dinielli		Chris Palladino	6 minutes
Los Bandoleros	July 28, 2009	Vin Diesel	T.J. Mancini	Vin Diesel & T.J. Mancini	Vin Diesel, Jessy Terrero & Samantha Vincent	20 minutes

The short films were either released direct-to-video or saw limited theatrical distribution, being mostly included as special features for The Fast and the Furious, 2 Fast 2 Furious, and Fast & Furious, as part of the DVD releases. The films, which range from 10 to 20 minutes, are designed to be self-contained stories that provide backstory for characters or events introduced in the films. They were also designed to bridge the chronological gap that was created as the initial leads departed the series.
